Editor---Reference your editorial about "History Repeats" in The Chronicle of 18th instant, I ask you how long will the world continue to believe the fairy tales about Napoleon at St. Helena? It has been proven to the satisfaction of all unbiased researchers, excepting English historians, that the original Napoleon I was never at St. Helena. He was killed by the British in his attempt to escape to America, was buried at sea, and a British intelligence officer previously trained for the purpose and a double of little Napoleon, took the conqueror's place at St. Helena. The Akashic Records, which do not tell lies, show this to be the truth. Why did the British do this trick, arranging for Napoleon a Mexican escape? To get rid of him for good and at the same time ingratiate themselves with the French people—their Napoleon at St. Helena so well treated by the British and finally his ashes returned to France—beg pardon, his heart, which was really that of a Britisher! How magnanimous of them!
