

SLEEP WELL, MR. FOHAT

Editor The Chronicle—Sir: R. J. McPherson writes in today's Safety Valve that in a century San Francisco, Sydney, New York, Tokyo, Hongkong, London, Yokohama, Chicago, Berlin and Paris, in the order named, will be the ten leading cities in the world. Well, now! Why, some of those towns won't be on the map a century hence! For, according to the best prophets, when Fohat, of which force electricity is the third differential, shifts his center vortex within the earth the earth's center of gravity will shift and the oceans will overrun the lands commensurate with the shift. It may be, then, that our famous bay will be 100 or more feet shallower than at present and so much smaller and the cities mentioned in the Near East and Orient may be submerged anywhere from a few feet to several thousand feet below sea level. Read up on Einstein's latest doctrine of gravity, then use a little occult sense and you will see that you may yet build skyscrapers on the bay and poor Los Angeles will have to move its harbor beyond Santa Catalina island.
